DIRECTIONS: Read the excerpt about “A Heritage of Smallness”. Then, compare and contrast Filipinos’ ways of living then and now using the Venn diagram below.

A Heritage of Smallness

Nick Joaquin

(1) Society for Filipinos is a small rowboat: barangay. Geography for the Filipino is a small vague saying: matanda pa kay Mahoma; noong peacetime. Enterprise for the Filipino is a small stall: the sarisari. Industry and production for the Filipino are the small immediate scratchings of each day: isang kahig, isang tuka. And commerce for the Filipino is the very smallest degree in retail: the tingi.

(2) What most astonishes foreigners in the Philippines is that this is a country, perhaps the only one in the world, where people buy and sell one stick of cigarette, half a head of garlic, a dab of hair pomade, part of the contents of a can or bottle, one single egg, one single banana. To foreigners used to buying things in carton or the dozen or the pound, and in large economy sizes, the exquisite transaction of Philippine tingi cannot be seem Lilliputian. So much effort by so many for so little! Like all those children risking neck and limb in the traffic to sell one stick of cigarette at a time or those grown-up men haunting the sidewalks all day to sell a puppy or lantern or a pair of socks. The amount of effort they spend seems out of all proportion to the returns. Such folks are, obviously, not indolent, but not being indolent is just obviously, not enough. Laboriousness just can never be the equal of labor as skill, labor as audacity, labor as enterprise.

(3) The Filipino who travels abroad gets to thinking that his is the hardest-working country in the world. By six or seven in the morning, we are already up and on our way to work, shops, and markets are open; the wheels of industry are already grinding.

(4) Abroad, especially in the West, if you go out at seven in the morning, you’re in a dead town. Everybody’s still in bed; everything’s still closed up. Activity doesn’t begin ‘till nine or ten – promptly at five P.M. By six, the business sections are dead towns again. And entire cities goes to sleep on weekends. They have shorter working day, a shorter working week. Yet they piled up more than we who work all day and all week.

ACTIVITY 3

Gifts for the City

Shirley Mary deLeon

Along the wide span of sphere
Roads that connect into a sun
Names of leaders have laid their mark
From Gracia, Quirino and Quezon.

I walked slowly along the avenues
Thinking of thoughts to help this city, too.
From menial tasks to heavy burdens be
I thought of sharing my gifts to see.

Follow traffic rules in signage on the streets, please
Dispose garbage made of paper, plastic and silts
Remember to clear the air of smog
By planting green and shrubs

Gifts as simple as a flower I Can give
Simple thoughts to renew each life with a kiss
A person, a student or a citizen
There are gifts we can give and share.

An excerpt from: Values

I.V. Mallari

And what is your attitude towards your fellow beings? Do you realize that regardless of their sex, race, nationality, religious belief, political affiliations, educational attainments, and social and economic status, they are neither better nor worse than you? Do you realize that even the humblest and the most illiterate among them are just as essential to the smooth running of the body politic as you or anybody else, as long as they perform their self-appointed tasks are useful to others as well as to themselves? Do you realize that without them you yourself would not be able to do your work with any degree of efficiency, much less live in contentment and happiness? And do you realize that, therefore, every one of them is as worthy of your consideration and respect of the rest of society, as even the most exalted among its members?
